Bikes were anarchy. Revolution was in the air. The Rolling Stones were charting with Jumping Jack Flash. Steve McQueen made Bullitt and Triumph made a classic Bonnie that they still talk about today.

2006 is a new cool era for Bonneville's. The modern day motorcycle now has a new range of Sixty8 Accessories that will give the motorcycle that contemporary style it deserves.

Today's Bonneville owes its style to its '60s heroes but the accessories don't come with mop haircuts and flares. From interchangeable tank covers that express your personality to the refined leather panniers, the range will be a refreshing break from the norm. Each product has been designed to complement one another allowing you to add as many accessories as you wish. After all, who needs panniers that could swallow a tent when all you travel with is a laptop and an iPod?

The Sixty8 range will be launched from March '06. For further information, contact your local authorised Triumph dealer or visit:
